Episode #2.

* * *

While Don Harvey is riding to the rescue of the burning runaway wagon containing a helpless girl and four kegs of powder, Joe Deenan, chief killer in the employ of the scoundrelly Gideon Trask, has succeeded in overcoming old Martin Heath and taking from him the coveted map of the French mineral survey.

Harvey rescues the girl from the wagon and sets the horses free; there is a great explosion a moment later. When he sees Deenan galloping off with the stolen papers, he follows, fights, wins and restores the papers to their owner. Then he offers his house to Heath and his daughter, Olive, during their stay in Arkansas City, and goes to spend the night with Francois Batiste, who is at that moment plunged in despair because he has received the Ace of Spades and is doomed to die.

He tells Harvey that Jim Heath is held prisoner in the saloon cellar and that he (Francois) is the man who gave Heath the French survey. Don Harvey calls upon law abiding citizens to free the prisoner, whilst Trask, by means of a forged letter, gets the papers away from Martin. Poker Dice Ann rides to warn Trask, whose duplicity is bared. Olive snatches the papers and rides to the saloon, followed by Ann, who fights her in the cellar and throws her down an old mine shaft. Olive's skirt catches on a protruding spike, and she hangs there, screaming while the skirt slowly tears way from the spike.
